

St. Basil the Great

Saint Basil was born in about the year 330 at Caesarea, the administrative center of Cappadocia. He was of illustrious lineage, famed for its eminence and wealth, and zealous for the Christian faith. Saint Basil spent the first years of his life on an estate belonging to his parents at the River Irida, where he was raised under the supervision of his mother Emilia and grandmother Macrina.

Basil received his initial education under the supervision of his father, and then he studied under the finest teachers in Caesarea Cappadocia. It was here that he made the acquaintance of Saint Gregory the Theologian. Later on, Basil transferred to a school at Constantinople, where he listened to eminent orators and philosophers. For the finishing touches to his education Saint Basil set off for Athens -- a center of classical enlightenment.

During the reign of the Emperor Valens the external government belonged to the Arians, who held several various opinions on questions of the Divinity of the Son of God and hence were divided into several factions. And to these dogmatic disputes were connected questions about the Holy Spirit. In his books Against Eunomios, Saint Basil the Great taught about the Divinity of the Holy Spirit and Its Oneness together with the Father and the Son. Subsequently, for a full explanation of the Orthodox teaching on this question -- at the request of the Bishop of Iconium Saint Amphylokhios -- Saint Basil wrote his book About the Holy Spirit.

Saint Basil almost daily celebrated Divine services. He was particularly concerned about the strict fulfilling of the canons of the Church, and kept attentive watch, so that only worthy individuals should enter into the clergy. He incessantly made the rounds of his own church, lest anywhere there be an infraction of Church discipline, and setting aright any unseemliness. At Caesarea Saint Basil built two monasteries -- a men's and a women's -- with a church in honor of 40 martyrs whose relics were buried there. For his clergy Saint Basil got an exemption from taxes. All his personal wealth and the income-proceeds from his church he used for the benefit of the destitute; in every center of his diocese he built a poor-house; at Caesarea, a home for wanderers and the homeless.

Sickly since youth, the toil of teaching, efforts at abstinence & the concerns and sorrows of pastoral service early sapped the strength of the saint. Saint Basil died on January 1st, 379 at age 49. Shortly before his death, he gave a blessing to Saint Gregory the Theologian to enter upon the Constantinople cathedral-chair.
